The FDA defines "gluten" to mean "the proteins that naturally occur in a gluten-containing grain and that may cause adverse health effects in persons with celiac disease (e.g., prolamins and glutelins)" under 21 CFR § 101.91 (2). Gluten-containing grains include wheat, barley, rye, or cross-bred hybrids thereof.

The ADM products listed above are manufactured from vegetable sources that can include any combination of soybean, canola, corn, cottonseed and/or coconut oils. These raw materials are not included within the FDA definition of gluten-containing grains. Therefore, these ADM products are considered to be gluten-free and do not contain ingredients or by-products derived from wheat, barley, rye, or related grain species.
